WHISKEY	General whiskey		P		According to the KA: "The following information has been adapted from The London Beth Din Kashrut Division. Irish whiskey may by law contain wine and other ingredients and thus should not be consumed except where the product has a Kosher symbol or has been Rabbinically approved. However the following applies to Scotch Whisky: 1. No additives are permitted in Scotch Whisky with the exception of caramel colour which is kosher. 2. Ordinary Scotch Whisky whether Single Malt or Blended without any mention of the use of Sherry, Port or other wine casks on the label or marketing literature can confidently be consumed without any concerns relating to having been in contact with wine casks. 3. Whisky which has been matured in wine casks has been subject to detailed halachic consideration by major poskim (including 'Minchas Yitzchak vol 2, 28 and Igros Moshe Yore Deah vol 1, 62 and 63) who did not forbid its consumption. 4. There is a new process however, known as wine cask finishes (also referred to as double or second maturation ) which is a secondary process that some claim is specifically designed to enhance the flavour of otherwise fully matured whiskey and impart a recognisable taste of the wine. This new process may not be covered by all the aforementioned heterim and accordingly some may wish to avoid products so labelled. The London Beth Din continues to allow all types of Scotch Whisky based on Teshuvos Igros Moshe, as does the Kashrut Authority."

ONLY FISH WITH FINS & SCALES ARE KOSHER.

Fresh fish must be recognizable as being a kosher species.

Jewish law therefore forbids the use of fillets which do not have the scaled skin attached & are not recognisable as being from a kosher species unless a rabbinic supervisor is present or the customer supervises the filleting of such fish. The supervisor should ensure that the knives and boards used are thoroughly clean before cutting commences.

Should there be any doubt as to whether the fillets or cutlets have been cut with a clean knife, then the fish must be thoroughly washed in cold water before use.

EXAMPLES OF ACCEPTABLE FRESH FISH SPECIES – please note that this list is not exhaustive
